Nichols, Hinazumi get Aloha PGA honors

ADVERTISER STAFF

Greg Nichols, former Waialae Country Club head golf professional and now new general manager and director of golf at the Ko Olina Golf Club, and Jay Hinazumi of Golf Concepts, Inc., each received two awards from the Aloha Section PGA at its annual recognition luncheon Monday at the Prince Hotel Waikiki.

Nichols was named the golf professional of the year and received the Junior Golf Leadership Award, while Hinazumi was presented the President's Award for his contributions to golf in Hawai'i besides being named the sales representative of the year.

Dr. Richard Ho, local representative of the United States Golf Association, received the Distinguished Service Award.

Merchandise-of-the-year awards went to Marty Keiter, Kapalua Golf Club (resort); Dave Kowalczyk, Honolulu Country Club (private); and Mike Iyoki, U.S. Army courses (public and military).

Also, Ron Castillo Jr. (Hapuna), PGA player of the year; Ben Hongo (Kapalua Golf Club), teacher of the year; George Hutchison (Hickam Māmala

EUGENE TANNER • The Honolulu Advertiser

David Kim, shown during this year's Sony Open in Hawai'i, will be back to keep score after he was recently sidelined by a kidney stone attack.

Tournaments depend on Kim to know score

In golf's give-and-take world, David Kim is a giver. He volunteers his services to keep the scoreboard in more than 25 golf tournaments a year, including the Sony Open and the Turtle Bay Championship, two PGA Tour events.

That's why the medical news that was giving the local golf circle some anxious moments recently centered on the kidney stone attack suffered by Kim.

Fortunately, despite spending several nights in emergency care, Kim didn't need surgery to remove the kidney stones. But the attack did keep him from doing his scoreboard duties in the season-ending Amateur championship and the Sony Open qualifying last week.

"I'm OK now. It's a matter of making an adjustment in my diet," said the 63-year-old Kim, who plans to show up for the Sony Open next month. Kim says he's ready to resume his score-keeping duties in the media center at the Waialae Country Club.

From then on, it'll be tournament after tournament as usual for Kim, who keeps the scoreboard at the Hawai'i State Open, State Amateur, Rainbow Open, Manoa Cup, Maui Open, Waikoloa Open, Hilo Open, Oahu Country Club Invitational as well as the Army, Navy-Marine, Hickam and Barbers Point amateur championships.

Doing so is a labor of love for Kim, who works in the Honolulu Advertiser press room. Except for traveling expenses to the Neighbor Island tournaments, he does it for free.

It's because of a love of the game of golf. Neat printing penmanship also helps.

"To me, it's a service to the players. And they appreciate it," he says.

Kim supplies all the colored pens and paraphernalia needed to keep running accounts on the leaderboards at the various tournaments. At 6 feet 1, Kim has no trouble reaching up to record the scores at the top of the score sheet.

The love of golf didn't come easily at first for Kim, whose father, Say Young Kim, was a president of the Korean Golf Club in the late 1940s.

"I hated golf. (When I was a kid), he used to drag me out on weekends to caddy for him at Moanalua," said Kim, who finally took up the game as a student at Iolani School.

After his ninth-grade year, he transferred to Roosevelt High School, where he met his wife to be, Amy. They were married on Jan. 14, 1959. It's a date he'll always remember because that was the date he was hired by the Honolulu Star-Bulletin.

Kim played golf with the guys in the press room and got his handicap down to a six. Then he began working part-time at the Pearl Country Club in the cart shop in the early '80s.

That's where Kim met golf official Norman Crowell, who kept the scoreboard for local tournaments such as the Manoa Cup. When Crowell died, Kim was asked to take over a lot of his scoreboard

In much the same way that Tiger Woods had his only O'ahu sighting as a member of the Stanford golf team in the John Burns Intercollegiate Invitational at the Kane'ohe Kipper.

"I got to see an up-and-coming superstar. That was nice," Kim said.

But recording scores for the non-superstars remains important to him, too.
